Noreen and Kenneth Murray Library – print books

On The King’s Buildings campus, the library is called The Noreen and Kenneth Murray Library. As you can see for the map on this slide, it is in the centre of the campus. It holds the print book collections for most of the schools in the College of Science and Engineering (Informatics print books are kept in the Main Library, down the road).

There are a lot of different libraries, around the University. So the Main Library, down in George Square, The Noreen and Kenneth Murray Library, The Vet Library, there are medical libraries... There is the Collections Facility out at South Gyle for most of the print journals we still have and there are a number of other libraries which are subject-specific, like The Murray Library is.

As a member of the University, your access to these is the same. When they are open again, properly, you will be able to borrow from them and visit them in the same way as you can the Noreen and Kenneth Murray Library.

At the moment it is hoped the Murray Library will be open from the 14th September…

N.B. The Murray Library did open again on the 14th September on a browsing and borrowing basis.

It is hoped that the opening hours, certainly, will extend by the 21st September, hopefully to normal semester hours which is 08:30-23:00 during the week days and weekends slightly more restricted.

www.ed.ac.uk/is/library-opening